Summary:

We don't have to pressure God to bless us, because He has already blessed us. This truth changes how we pray. We can stop striving under religious effort and start resting in the finished work of Christ because we understand that every spiritual blessing flows from what He accomplished, not from what we perform. Praying from grace anchors us in our identity in Christ. Therefore, we approach God from a place of victory instead of begging. We're righteous because of Jesus, not because of our track record. Shame can no longer push us into hiding. Grace-based prayer aligns our words with what God has already declared rather than with our fluctuating emotions. Because of Jesus, we're fully persuaded that grace empowers our relationship with God and frees us to live and pray from a place of completed redemption.

Notes:

1. We don't have to work hard to persuade God to bless us. He already blessed us through Jesus.
2. Grace-based prayer is based on the finished works of Jesus. It's rooted in our identity, our union with God, our response to His faithfulness, and our rest in Christ's finished works.
3. We must discover for ourselves that we're the righteousness of God, no matter what we do or how often we fall short.
4. When we pray, we can be confident that He hears us, because the Bible says He already has.
5. Grace turns requests into gratitude because we know that God is faithful when He tells us everything is done.
