Summary:

God's ways of operating are completely different than man's ways, and much more effective in changing us for the better and causing us to want to live godly. The world uses punishment and threats to correct our behavior; by contrast, God uses mercy and forgiveness. The absence of condemnation gives us the power to overcome what once overcame us. To convince us to reject the world and its sinful ways, God continually reminds us of how attractive and beautiful heaven is. He also instructs us to declare in faith the passing away of earth, which is temporary. Yielding ourselves to Him allows Him to work through us to reach others through empathy and compassion, not through judgment. We mustn't settle for what we see around us, but instead focus on Jesus and on heaven because the best is yet to come.

Notes:

1. Jesus doesn't condemn or judge us for our sins; He instead shows us grace.
2. God wants to keep His people from being influenced by worldly things; however, His approach is different from condemnation. He doesn't condemn the unsaved, but many churches do.
3. It's not our job as Christians to convict people of the sins they already know they are committing; we must let the Holy Spirit lead the way in this area. He convinces them that their lifestyle won't produce the results they want.
4. One method God uses to draw people's hearts away from worldly things is by setting before them the stability and attractiveness of things that are above. Heaven is eternal. We must live our lives in constant expectation of Jesus.
5. Another method God uses to draw people's hearts away from worldly things is by faithfully declaring the imminent passing out of sight of the physical and the natural, the quickly fading, shakable nature of earthly things, for earth is temporary.
