Summary:

True prosperity isn't defined by material wealth but by wholeness in Christ. It encompasses peace, joy, relationships, and a sense of identity in God. The love of money, rather than money itself, is the root of all evil. Our giving should be generous and from the heart, not out of obligation. Prosperity flows from our relationship with God and His presence within us, not from our performance or possessions.

Notes:

1. Prosperity includes peace, joy, and healthy relationships, not just financial wealth. Joseph was prosperous because God was with him, not because of his material possessions.
2. Money isn't evil; the love of money is the root of all evil. Trusting money more than God leads to a wrong relationship with it.
3. Tithing is one form of giving, not the sum total. Under the new covenant, giving should be generous and from the heart, not out of obligation.
4. In the new covenant, God's presence is within us, making us prosperous.
5. Righteousness is a gift, not a goal, and it enables us to reign in life with favor, provision, success, and peace.
